Access and student success strategy 2025: Implementation roadmap

1 Implementation framework

The Access and Student Success Strategy brings together activity across the whole university for the next five years and provides an access and student success lens. Some of the initiatives are relevant to areas beyond student engagement such as sustainability and equality and inclusion, but all have an impact on access and success at Leeds. As such, the strategic alignment of this work with other areas will be crucial.

The ownership of the strategy by different areas means that much of the implementation can take place simultaneously, and much of the work is already underway. However, the burden on faculties and schools, who will be responsible for embedding many of the initiatives is a potential key risk to implementation and one that needs careful management.

The next sections outline the key principles for implementation; the timeline for implementation; governance and accountability to support the strategy; strategic risks and key stakeholders to engage.

1.1 Structured approach with clear principles

Leeds should adopt a 'systems approach' to the strategy implementation, which recognises the impact the different initiatives will have on one another. It must also be staged in a way that recognises the dependencies between different initiatives. For example, there are dependencies between effective learning analytics and personal tutoring. Where relevant, initiatives should not exist in isolation or compete for resources, but rather feel they are all working together towards a mutual goal. Crucially the implementation should also be cognisant of the fact that different parts of the university are engaged in different aspects of the strategy implementation, some of which is already underway.

Five design principles should underpin successful implementation. The principles recognise the scale of the task at hand and the need for effective joined-up approaches. These are:

1. Clarity and accountability. Implementing this strategy will require effort from staff across the university, not just those involved in Educational Engagement and the Lifelong Learning Centre. To make real progress, there must be clear lines of accountability so that staff understand their responsibilities and this agenda remains a focus in light of various priorities.
2. Support and enable those that are accountable to deliver. In relation to the above, staff responsible for the success of this strategy will face competing priorities and the university must provide the appropriate support by considering the staging of initiatives and the culture and training to successfully affect change.
3. Build empathy and awareness. While implementing the strategy, listening to the challenges facing students and staff will be crucial for overcoming barriers and allowing continuous improvement.
4. Bring stakeholders (staff and students) along. As this is a university-wide endeavour, successful communication and stakeholder engagement will be crucial. Those responsible for driving the strategy must be clear on the input required from different stakeholders to deliver, including students.
5. Use data to better inform progress. A key enabler for the strategy is effective evaluation underpinned by the student voice. Throughout the five years, continually reviewing and improving initiatives through the effective use of data will be key.

Strong project management through governance, risk management and stakeholder engagement will be fundamental to the delivery of the initiatives outlined above. The next section provides further details in relation to these areas.

1.2 Clear project governance

Successful implementation will rely in part on clear project governance and lines of accountability for decision-making. Figure 1 below provides an overview of the governance structure surrounding the strategy, including the relevant boards, committees and groups and lines of reporting. Table 1 provides further details of the roles and responsibilities of each group.

1.3 Active risk management

The University of Leeds will need to take an active risk management approach to deliver the strategy. Some of the risks relate to uncertainties resulting from the pandemic, including funding, institutional priorities, student pipeline, student experience and opportunities to progress. The list of key risks in Table 2 were developed in a workshop with the strategy taskforce.

Table 2 | Risks

1.4 Careful stakeholder engagement

1.5 Measuring success

Measurable targets will be fundamental to understanding the success of the strategy. Leeds set targets across access and student success as well as enablers. The measures include those laid out in the access and participation plan to 2025, as well as stretching undergraduate targets to 2030. In addition, postgraduate access and success targets have been set. Measuring progress against the enablers will also be important. Table 4 provides the measures of success along with a description of how they will be measured.

Table 4 | Success measures

2 Implementation roadmap

The ownership of the strategy across the university means that teams can work simultaneously in a joined-up way to deliver the various strands. However, a lot of the delivery lies with the Educational Engagement team alongside academic staff in faculties. It is therefore important to take a staged approach where necessary and to be cognisant of dependencies. This section plots the strategy implementation roadmap over three horizons, highlighting dependencies where they exist, and has been designed with input from the strategy steering group.

2.1 Access and Student Success initiatives overview across Horizons 1-3

The University of Leeds should take a staged approach to successfully deliver the strategy. Horizon 1 will focus on establishing the key enablers such as governance processes, progressing the initiatives that are already planned and underway for the next 18 months and establishing the foundations for those that are new. In Horizon 2 the focus will be on firmly embedding initiatives, focus on developing those with a longer lead-in time and reviewing progress. In Horizon 3, the aim will be to test the progress being made and plan for future change. The university should review progress against the three horizons as part of the annual planning process to ensure the activity is on track and readjust as necessary.

Figure 2 below provides a high-level overview of the activity in each horizon. It includes a pre-launch phase which will involve establishing the necessary governance arrangements to support successful delivery. The activity is then broken down by pillar in more detail below.
