We have been subject to attempted cyber-attacks in the previous two years. Where required, we report breaches to the Information Commissioner's Office (ICO).

However, we consider that further details are exempt from disclosure under section 31(1)(a) of the Freedom of Information Act.

Section 31(1)(a) sets out that information is exempt from disclosure if its release would or would be likely to prejudice the prevention or detection of crime.

To reveal the information regarding the number and nature of cyber-attacks would provide would-be or attempted attackers with information regarding our cyber-defence provision. It would indicate whether attempts have been detected and/or successful. This information could be used by motivated individuals in order to target the University, or to adapt behaviour in order to avoid detection.

Section 31(1)(a) is a qualified exemption. This means that the University of Leeds is required to consider whether the public interest in the information outweighs the public interest in maintaining the exemption.

There is clearly a very strong public interest in protecting public authorities from crime. To release information which increases the University’s vulnerability to cyber-crime would jeopardise our ability to provide services to our students (current, former and potential), and would put at risk personal, financial and commercial sensitive information. We therefore consider that there is a very strong public interest in maintaining the exemption. Conversely, we do not consider there to be any particular public interest in the disclosure of this information. While it is important for students and the public to understand that the University takes the threat of cyber-crime seriously, and are taking appropriate measures to tackle it, we do not consider that this interest would be furthered by the release of this information.

We therefore consider that the public interest is firmly in favour of withholding the information in this case.

We hope this information is helpful. If you have any questions about this email, however, please do not hesitate to contact us on foi@leeds.ac.uk
